KING OF COCALAND – UN LOSING WAR ON DRUGS

52' (ENG, SPA)

Despite the UN's seeming attempts at hindering cocaine production by subsidizing farmers of cocoa, coffee or palm oil, the cocaine plantations in Peru have still managed to become one of the world's largest sources of production.

Why is that? Is this because the UN-companies that are supposedly fighting against cocaine production, when out of the spotlight, are the very ones responsible for the development of the cocaine industry? This accusation lies heavy and has led to internal investigations within the UN. Are the UN officials enriching themselves in the name of goodwill?
